ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Following the organization of the Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Fine Arts and Museum Collection Fund and the date fixed for opening the First Annual Exhibition, the time was so limited that many painters found it difficult—in some cases impossible—to contribute.

To fill vacancies in the catalogue thus created, a few very important works have generously been contributed by their owners.

The Director wishes, on behalf of the Fine Arts Committee, to acknowledge its indebtedness to these friends of the Carnegie Institute. The names of these contributors are: H. C. Frick, A. M. Byers, John Caldwell, Mrs. Wm. Thaw, Jr., of Pittsburgh; Prof. Edwin Emerson, Wm. Macbeth, H. Wunderlich, M. Knoedler, L. Crist Delmonico, Fannie Gordon Loper, Thos. Shields Clarke, of New York; Durand—Ruel, Boussod, Valadon & Co., of Paris; Tooth & Son, of London; Alexander Reid, of Glasgow; Chas. L. Freer, of Detroit, and the Academy of Fine Arts of Philadelphia.

He also desires to convey the thanks of the Committee to Harper Brothers for the privilege of reproducing portraits of Morot, Dagnan-Bouveret, and Puvis de Chavannes from "Art and Criticism;" Alma-Tadema, Fields, Lenbach and Max from "Harper's Magazine;" and to Charles Scribner's Sons for the privilege of reproducing the portraits of Vedder, Cox and Wiles from "American Illustrators."

STATUARY.

Perfect reproductions of fifteen of the greatest pieces of sculpture in the world. A description of these masterpieces of Art is given in detail, as follows:

1 ANTINOUS.

Vatican. Antinous (An-ti-noo-us) was a youth of great beauty, the favorite and companion of Hadrian. He was drowned in the Nile, A. D. 122, and, by order of Hadrian, was enrolled among the gods. This exquisite statue was found at Palestrina in 1773. The figure is nude, having a pensive attitude, with both arms extended downward, and the left foot partly raised. The hair is knotted in the Roman style. The statue is characterized by an expression of thoughtful melancholy in the drooping head, by brows overshadowed by clustering curls, and by a suggestion of sadness in the curve of the voluptuous mouth.

2 APOLLO GOUFFIER.

This statue (formerly the property of the Duc de Choiseul Gouffier) is now in the British Museum, and is a very fine illustration of the transition period from the archaic to the more natural and life-like style. The head is small, and an athletic prominence is given to the muscles, which is unusual in the treatment of this subject. The stem of a tree supports this statue. The Apollo Gouffier is said by one critic to be the finest piece of statuary in the world.

3 LAOCOON.

Vatican. Laocoon (Lah-ok-o-on) was a Trojan priest who attempted to dissuade the Trojans from drawing the wooden horse of the Greeks into the city, and advised its being burned. For this, Minerva, who favored the Greeks, struck him with blindness, and sent two serpents to destroy him and his two sons. The statue was discovered in the Baths of Titus, in 1506. "The Laocoon," writes Pliny, (about A. D. 100) "which stands in the palace of the Emperor Titus, may be considered superior to all other works both of painting and statuary. The whole group—the father, the boys, and the awful folds of the serpents—was formed out of a single block, in accordance with a vote of the Senate, by Agesander, Polydorus, and Athenadorus." This work, which was pronounced by Michael Angelo at the time of its discovery, the miracle of art, is a creation which would have been thought impossible had it never been executed. Hillard says: "It stands upon the very line by which the art of sculpture is divided from poetry and painting." "An immortal agony," says Hawthorne, "with a strange calmness diffused through it, so that it resembles the vast rage of the sea, calm on account of its immensity; or the tumult of Niagara, which does not seem to be tumult because it keeps pouring on forever." Lubke says: "From three different scenes, one united and strictly connected group is formed, depicting the one moment of utmost suffering and horror petrified with fearful truth, and the whole pathos is concentrated in the mighty figure of the father."

4 AUGUSTUS.

Vatican. Augustus Cæsar was the grandson of Julia, the sister of Julius Cæsar, and was born B. C. 63. His original name was Cæsar Octavius, but in B. C. 27, the Senate conferred on him the title of Augustus. Soon after the death of Julius he was elected Consul. Afterward he united with Antony and Lepidus in the Second Triumvirate, by which it was agreed that their respective enemies should be slain, among whom were Cicero, 300 Senators, and 2,000 citizens. Dissensions soon arising, Lepidus and Antony were conquered in turn, and Augustus became master of the Roman Empire. He continued his reign forty-four years, dying at the age of 76.

This work, which is considered to be without exception the finest imperial portrait statue which has come down to us, was found in 1863, in the Villa Livia, nine miles from Rome. Upon the richly sculptured cuirass are bas-reliefs of the achievements of the Emperor. Augustus, as the sun, stands in his chariot, preceded by Aurora and Phosphorus. In the center is a warrior saluting the sun. A Legionary stands before him with a dog, symbolizing the fidelity of the army. On the right and left are seated figures representing Hispania and Dalmatia, provinces conquered by Augustus. Below them are an Apollo seated on a griffin, and Diana on a stag, representing the victory over the fleet of Antony, and the recovery of Sicily, sacred to Diana; and on the shoulders are two sphinxes, in indication of his conquest of Egypt.

5 VENUS OF MILO.

Louvre. Discovered on the island of Melos, or Milo, in 1820. Age unknown, but belonging to the best period of Grecian art. In womanly grace and dignity, considered the finest statue known, and as placing the subject midway between the goddesses and Venuses. The arms are lost; draped from the hips. Lubke says: "This is the only statue of Aphrodite (the Greek form of the name Venus) handed down to us which represents her, not as merely a beautiful woman, but as a goddess. The form is powerful and majestic, and yet instinct with an indescribable charm of youth and beauty, while the pure and noble expression of the head denotes the goddess' independence of all human requirements, and the calm self-sufficiency of her divine character. Grandly serious and almost severe, the goddess of love appears not yet conceived, as in later representations, as a love demanding woman." The simple drapery resting on the hips displays her grand beauty, which, with all its charms, has that mysterious suggestion which is the genuine expression of the divine."

6 VENUS OF KNIDOS.

Vatican. The most perfect copy known of the Venus of Knidos, by Praxiteles. The figure, which is above life size, stands upon the right foot, left slightly touching the pedestal, the right hand clasps the drapery gathered about the middle of the figure, the left is raising the drapery from an urn, which gives the left shoulder considerable elevation above the right. The left arm bears a bracelet. The arrangement of the hair is simple and pleasing. The face is peculiarly expressive of feminine innocence and sincerity. Venus has just risen from the sea.

7 DISCOBOLUS.

Vatican. Dis-cob-o-lus, quoit thrower. This statue represents the most acute observation of life, the most correct conception of bold, rapid movement, and the greatest freedom in the expression of the figure itself.

8 CROUCHING VENUS.

Vatican. Found in the Campagna. She is partly resting on one knee, the right arm raised and inclined toward the left shoulder.

9 THORN EXTRACTOR.

Full title, "Boy Extracting a Thorn from his Foot." Also called "Shepherd Martius." Uffizi Gallery, Florence. A charming antique sculpture of a lad seated and endeavoring to extract a thorn from his foot.

10 APOLLO BELVEDERE.

Vatican. The chef d'œuvre of the collection, found in Nero's Palace, Rome, near the end of the fifteenth century. Represented nude, with his chlamys thrown back over both shoulders and partly on the left arm; standing upon the right foot, the left nearly raised, the right hand spread, the wrist resting upon the trunk of a tree up which a serpent is crawling; the left arm extended and the hand grasping some unknown object. The pose and expression are those of expectancy. From the time of its discovery to the present the purport of this statue has been a source of almost uninterrupted discussion. "In this statue," says Hillard, "more than in any other work in marble, we recognize the grace and animation of a living form—a sympathetic charm which every one can feel." Schnaase: "The most brilliant piece of sculpture of ancient times."

11 DYING GLADIATOR.

Capitoline Museum, Rome. Found in the Gardens of Sallust. By some critics believed to be a dying Gaul. A Greek work, sculptor unknown. Right arm restored by Michael Angelo. One of the finest Greek works known. John Bell says: "It is a most tragical and touching representation, and no one can meditate upon it without the most melancholy feelings. Of all proofs this is the surest of the effects produced by art. The forms are full, round and manly, the visage mournful; the lips yielding to the effect of pain; the eye deepened by despair; the skin of the forehead a little wrinkled; the hair clotted in thick sharp-pointed locks, as if from the sweat of fight and exhausted strength; the body large, the shoulders square, the balance well preserved by the hand on which he rests; the limbs finely rounded. The joints alone are slender and fine. No affectation of anatomy here." "I do not believe," says Hawthorne, "that so much pathos is wrought into any other block of stone."

12 MINERVA.

Vatican. Minerva (Pallas Athena) was the daughter of Jupiter and the principal goddess of the Greeks, in whom wisdom and power were harmoniously blended. She was the chief protector of the state, of agriculture, and of all useful and elegant arts; and maintained the authority of law and the will of the people. This statue is known as Minerva Medica, or Pallas Gustiniani (joos-tin-a-ah-nee); full length, with spear and helmet; found in the temple of Minerva Medica on the Esquiline Hill. Supposed to be a copy of Phidias. Goethe says: "This statue fills me with admiration. I cannot praise it sufficiently."

13 KNIFE SHARPENER.

Uffizi, Florence. Found in Rome, sixteenth century. Supposed, by some, to be from the group of Marsyas, who was to be flayed alive; by others to be a slave overhearing a conspiracy. "This statue," says Hillard, "is an enigma to which no satisfactory solution has ever been offered. But as to its power there can be no doubt. Every line glows with the fire of truth."

14 HERMES.

By Praxiteles. At Olympia. Discovered by German excavators at Olympia, May 7, 1877. Hermes (Greek form of the name Mercury) is supporting the child Dionysius. He leans gracefully with his arm on the stump of a tree. The more closely we examine it the more deeply are we moved to admiration by the combination of truth and beauty in the sculptured form. The myriad risings and depressions of the surface of the tender and elastic skin show a knowledge of Nature and a skill in reproducing her effects beyond the reach of any but the greatest sculptors of the highest period of plastic art. Hermes is represented nude, having thrown his chlamys loosely over the tree on which he rests, as if to leave his limbs in perfect ease and freedom.

15 DORYPHORUS.

Do-ryph-o-rus, the Spear Bearer. By Polycleitus; his most celebrated work. In Naples Museum, found at Herculaneum. Statue of a robust youth whose whole frame has been developed to its full size and strength by gymnastic and martial exercises. He is represented as standing quiet and motionless, and may once have held a lance in his hand. As no such person ever existed, this statue may be considered as a representation of the human form, freed from all the inherited or acquired defects which are found in every living man. Cicero alludes to this statue, saying that it was the teacher of the sculptor Lysippus.

THE PARTHENON FRIEZE.

"Nothing in all art," says Palgrave, "has yet equalled the sculptures of the Parthenon in poetical quality of the very highest order."

When Pericles was at the height of his power in Athens he determined to build on the rocky mount of the Acropolis a temple which would surpass in grandeur and beauty the ancient temple of Pallas Athene which had formerly stood there. The great Phidias undertook the execution or design of all the sculptural decorations. Doric was the chosen order of architecture, and the finest Pentelic marble was used for the structure. Along the top of the external wall of the cella, under the ceiling of the peristyle, ran a frieze sculptured in very low relief. In 1800 the Earl of Elgin, English Ambassador to Turkey, reached the country, and perceiving that the Turks were rapidly destroying the important remains of the Parthenon and selling them for relics, he obtained authority from the Porte under which he brought the best parts of the ancient sculptures to England and they are now in the British Museum and known as the "Elgin Marbles."

It is from the remains of these sculptures, and especially of those on the frieze of the cella, that the student of Art is enabled to perceive that the beauty of the far-famed temple has not been exaggerated, either by ancient or modern report.

The Parthenon frieze represents in low relief the Panathenaic Procession. At this festival of all of the Athenians, which was celebrated every four years, the highest honors were paid to the divine Pallas Athene. We may easily infer from the frieze that the festival was inaugurated under the auspices of several divinities and deified heroes, the priestess of Athene and the Chief Archon, or magistrate, representing them in person. They are observed in the bas-reliefs reclining on seats. First in the procession came aged men, carrying olive branches, then came warriors on horseback and in chariots, armed with lances and bucklers, some wearing only the chlamys or scarf, and some, as it would seem from the frieze, even without this covering; foreigners or sojourners in the city bearing little boats, indicative of their having come from afar; Athenian matrons, attended by the foreigners' wives carrying water pots, in token of their dependence; young men crowned with millet, singing hymns in praise of the goddess, probably assisted by players on the flute and lyre; and maidens of noble Athenian families, carrying baskets of offerings, etc., and hence called basket bearers. They were attended by the foreigners' daughters, bearing umbrellas and folding chairs; and in the rear of the procession came the oxen contributed for the sacrifices by each of the dependencies of Athens. Arrived at the eastern end of the Parthenon, the peplos was given in by the archon to the priestess of Athene, oxen were sacrificed, and libations poured out to the goddess, the herald imploring the divine blessing on the Athenians. Feasting, games, and entertainments followed; among the latter were torch races, on horse and foot; gymnastic exercises, musical contests, recitals of the Homeric poems, and other games and displays peculiar to the procession; the victors being presented with a vase filled with oil from the olive on the Acropolis, sacred to Athens, and with an olive crown. Dances terminated the festival. Such was the animated and vivacious subject which Phidias selected for treatment on the Parthenon frieze.

An inspection of this wonderful work will elicit admiration for the simplicity of composition, breadth of general effect, the elegance and delicacy of the heads and draperies, and the life and spirit of the horses. The horses appear to live and move, to roll their eyes, to gallop, prance, and curvet; there is a deer-like elegance and lightness to them, and although the relief is not above an inch from the background, and they are so much smaller than nature, these horses seem almost to be alive.

The total length of the Parthenon frieze was 524 feet, and the height of its slabs 3 feet 4 inches. Less than half of the original has been saved from the iconoclasm of time.

THE LUCA DELLA ROBBIA PANELS.

In the corridor of the Music Hall are two mural tablets, by Luca Della Robbia, which will be viewed by the public with admiration and delight. No sculptured work of the great fifteenth century ever surpassed the Singing Gallery which Luca Della Robbia made for the cathedral of Florence between 1431 and 1440, with its ten magnificent panels of singing angels and dancing boys. The originals are now in the Bargello Museum, Florence, and casts of these two have been obtained for the Carnegie Library. The panels give a felicitous representation of the happiness of childhood and youth. The sculptured figures have all the free and graceful abandon of nature, and every detail of the scenes is so true to life that these tablets seem as living pictures.
